What's new:

"You can't just lie here!" Harry snapped. From the outside of the house, he couldn't tell who said it. "Yes, I can," Draco shot back. Ron simply stared at the two of them in shock. "Have you ever seen a centaur ask someone to do something they aren't allowed to do?" Draco pressed on. "I did it a long time ago when I was younger." "That doesn't have anything to do with --" "Yes, it does," Draco said firmly. Harry was in no mood to argue, so he left it alone. "Have a headache or something?" "No." Ron admitted. "Maybe it's time for some more medicine," Draco suggested. He pulled a blue bottle from his pocket and snapped it open. "You really shouldn't be drinking alcoholic beverages. They're inappropriate." Draco poured a bit of liquid into a glass, then handed it to Ron. "I'll keep telling you for the rest of your life." "So what's this about the Quest? What did you do this time?" "Really, Ron," he replied as he placed the glass carefully on the table. "That's not fair. Tell me." "No." Draco said. "Please don't make me beg!" Ron protested, and he got up from the sofa and started pacing. "Well," Draco said after he watched Ron pace over to the cabinet. "I took you on the one night I didn't feel like doing anything. I'm not entirely responsible for the blowout, when you haven't been able to even consider doing anything normal since the third year let's been!" "Shut up!" Ron yelled, and he slammed the cabinet door. "Look, don't give me this crap. You don't even know me anymore! I'm almost eighteen, and you're in an over protective mood because you know that you, the Dragon, isn't exactly approachable for everyone." "Really?" Draco asked, and he sat down on the arm of the sofa. "Yes," Ron said. "You can't do all your old crap, because you're too big, and you are an adult, and you're my best friend." "The Dragon is my pet," Draco pointed out
